

COPY

CHARLES L. HOFFMAN

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

October Term, 1947

No. 40

DONALD WADE,
PETITIONER,

v.

NATHAN MAYO, as State Prison
Custodian of the State of Florida,

RESPONDENT.

SUPPLEMENTAL BRIEF OF RESPONDENT.

J. TOM WATSON

Attorney General of the State of Florida,
Attorney for Respondent.

REEVES BOWEN

SUMTER LEITNER

Assistant Attorneys General; Of Counsel.

INDEX

SUBJECT INDEX

	Page
STATEMENT OF PROBLEMS FOR DISCUSSION.....	1-2
ARGUMENT	2-13

FIRST PROBLEM:

The propriety of the exercise of jurisdiction by the District Court in this case, when it appears of record, in the State's motion for dismissal of the appeal on habeas corpus, that petitioner had not availed himself of the remedy of appeal from his conviction, apparently open after trial though now barred by limitation.....	2-12
--	------

SECOND PROBLEM:

Whether the failure of Florida to make objection in this proceeding affects the above problem.....	12-13
--	-------

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES CITED:

Cutts v. State, 54 Fla. 21, 45 So. 491.....	6-7
Ex Parte Hawk, 321 U. S. 114.....	2
Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S. 309.....	3, 12
House v. State, 130 Fla. 400, 177 So. 705.....	7
John R. Johnson v. State, 28 So. 2d 585.....	4-5
Johnson v. State, 148 Fla. 510, 4 So. 2d 671....	4, 7
Johnson v. Zerbst, 304 U. S. 458.....	10
Smith v. O'Grady, 312 U. S. 329.....	11
Watson v. State, 142 Fla. 218, 194 So. 640.....	4, 7
White v. Ragen, 324 U. S. 760.....	6, 9
Williams v. Kaiser, 323 U. S. 471.....	11

the Circuit Court of Appeals, or this Court, any question as to the propriety of the exercise of jurisdiction by the District Court.

However, because of the Court's request, we now file this brief to present our views on the above stated problems.

FIRST PROBLEM

We find no exceptional circumstances disclosed by the record which would take this case out of the rule stated and applied in Ex Parte Hawk, 321 U. S. 114, as follows:

"Ordinarily an application for habeas corpus by one detained under a state court judgment of conviction for crime will be entertained by a federal court only after all state remedies available, including all appellate remedies in the state courts and in this Court by appeal or writ of certiorari, have been exhausted. Tinsley v. Anderson, 171 US 101, 104, 105, 43 L. ed 91, 96, 18 S Ct 805; Urquhart v. Brown, 205 US 179, 51 L ed 760, 27 S Ct 459; United States ex rel Kennedy v. Tyler, 269 US 13, 70 L ed 138, 46 S Ct 1; Mooney v. Holohan, supra (294 US 115, 79 L ed 795, 55 S Ct 340, 98 ALR 406); Ex parte Abernathy, No. _____, October 18, 1943 (320 US 219, ante, 1, 64 S Ct 13)." (Emphasis supplied).

In paragraph 6 of the petition for writ of habeas corpus filed in the District Court, the petitioner alleged that he obtained a writ of habeas corpus which was quashed by the Circuit Court of Palm Beach County, Florida. (Tr. 3).

Paragraph 7 of said petition alleged that the Attorney General filed a motion to dismiss the petitioner's appeal to the Supreme Court of Florida from the order quashing said writ (Tr. 3). A copy of said motion to dismiss appeal was annexed to said petition as Exhibit B (Tr. 6-7), and, by apt reference, was made a part of said petition (Tr. 3).

Paragraph 8 of said petition alleged that the Supreme Court of Florida considered said motion to dismiss and made an order dismissing the appeal (Tr. 3). A copy of said order was attached to said petition as Exhibit C (Tr. 7-8), and, by apt reference, was made a part of said petition (Tr. 3).

Section 455, Title 28, U. S. C. A., says that:

"§455. Allowance and Direction. The court, or justice, or judge to whom such application is made shall forthwith award a writ of habeas corpus, unless it appears from the petition itself that the party is not entitled thereto. The writ shall be directed to the person in whose custody the party is detained." (Emphasis supplied).

It was the duty of the District Judge, when considering said petition, to treat it as if demurred to by the respondent, and to deny the petition if it appeared from the petition that the petitioner was not entitled to the writ. We quote the rule to that effect from Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S. 309 (text 332), as follows:

"The District Court having considered the case upon the face of the petition, we must do the same, treating it as if demurred to by the sheriff. There is no doubt of the jurisdiction to issue the writ of habeas corpus. The question is as to the propriety of issuing it in the present case. Under § 755, Rev. Stat., it was the duty of the court to refuse the writ if it appeared from the petition itself that appellant was not entitled to it. And see Ex parte Watkins, 3 Pet. 193, 201; Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. 2, 110; Ex parte Terry, 128 U. S. 289, 301." (Emphasis supplied).

We submit that the District Court should have treated the petition as though demurred to, and should have denied it because it showed on its face that the petitioner was not entitled to relief from said Court.

4

We think that the petition and exhibits thereto put the District Judge on notice that the Supreme Court of Florida had dismissed the petitioner's appeal in the habeas corpus case for one of the following reasons: (1) Because the petitioner had not taken a direct appeal from his conviction, or (2) because, on the merits, the Florida Supreme Court considered that the petitioner was not entitled to avoid his conviction on account of the trial court's refusal of his request for the appointment of counsel. We will consider these reasons in reverse order.

The District Judge might well have construed the Florida Supreme Court's order dismissing appeal as being on the merits, that is to say, as being an adjudication that the trial court's refusal of the petitioner's request for the appointment of counsel did not entitle the petitioner to avoid his conviction.

This is so because the State's motion to dismiss the appeal, upon which the order of dismissal was predicated, pointed out that the Circuit Court's order quashing writ of habeas corpus was made "upon the authority of" decisions of the Florida Supreme Court cited in said order (Tr. 7); and because the Florida Supreme Court decisions cited in the Circuit Court's said order, viz., Watson v. State, 142 Fla. 218, 194 So. 640, and Johnson v. State, 148 Fla. 510, 4 So. 2d 671 (Tr. 5-C), held that no duty rested upon trial courts to appoint counsel for defendants in non-capital cases.

That the order dismissing appeal was subject to the construction that it was on the merits is borne out by a decision rendered after the District Judge had rendered judgment in favor of the petitioner, viz., John R. Johnson v. State, _____ Fla. _____, 28 So. 2d 585. In said

Johnson case, the Supreme Court of Florida spoke of the appeal of the petitioner, Donald Wade, which is here under consideration, in words as follows:

"In May, 1945, Donald Wade presented his appeal to this Court from a judgment quashing a writ of habeas corpus theretofore issued by the Circuit Court of Palm Beach County on the petition of Donald Wade alleging that he had been unlawfully convicted of the commission of a felony in Palm Beach County in that 'at the time of his trial, conviction and sentence he was without aid of counsel and the court did not make an appointment of counsel, nor did petitioner waive his constitutional rights to the aid of counsel, and he was incapable adequately of making his own defense, in consequence of which he was compelled to go to trial without the aid of counsel.' It was also alleged that he was ignorant and was also, because of lack of funds, unable to employ counsel; and that he requested the court to appoint counsel for him. He further alleged that he was not guilty of the offense charged.

"Motion was made to dismiss the petition on the ground that the appeal was frivolous and on May 14, 1945, we entered an order granting the motion to dismiss on the ground stated.

"We recognize the fact that in a great number of cases in other jurisdictions courts have construed provisions of respective State Constitutions similar to ours to guarantee to a defendant charged with a felony the benefit of counsel.

"We are also cognizant of the rule in the Federal Courts but we are of the view that those decisions do not control in Florida."

If the District Judge considered the order dismissing appeal as being an adjudication on the merits, then it was the duty of said Judge to deny the petition because of the petitioner's failure to present the question to this Court on certiorari or appeal from the Florida Supreme Court's order dismissing appeal. We quote from White v. Ragen, 324 U. S. 760, as follows:

"Where the highest state court in which a decision could be had, considers and adjudicates the merits of a petition for habeas corpus, state remedies, including appellate review, are not exhausted so as to permit the filing of a petition for habeas corpus in a Federal district court, unless the Federal question involved is presented to this Court on certiorari or appeal from the state court decision. Ex parte Hawk, supra (321 US 116, 117, 88 L. Ed 574, 575, 64 S. Ct. 448)."

We think that the District Judge may also properly have construed the Florida Supreme Court's order dismissing said appeal as being based on the fact that the petitioner had not sought relief by direct appeal.

This is so because the motion to dismiss appeal set out that the appeal record revealed that the petitioner resorted to habeas corpus on March 16, 1945, one day after his conviction on March 15, 1945, and that it did not appear that he took an appeal or filed a motion for new trial (Tr. 6-7).

If the District Judge construed the order dismissing appeal as being based on the petitioner's failure to take a direct appeal from his conviction, it was said Judge's duty to deny the petition because it was apparent that the petitioner had not exhausted his remedies in the state courts.

It is clear that the petitioner could have raised the question of denial of counsel upon direct appeal from his conviction.

In Cutts v. State, 54 Fla. 21, 45 So. 491, one of the questions raised and decided by the Supreme Court of Florida on direct appeal was as to whether the trial court erred in not appointing counsel for Cutts.

7

In Watson v. State, 142 Fla. 218, 194 So. 640, the Supreme Court of Florida decided on direct appeal the question of whether it was the trial court's duty to appoint counsel for Watson.

In Johnson v. State, 148 Fla. 510, 4 So. 2d 671, the Supreme Court of Florida decided on direct appeal the question of whether any duty rested on the trial court to appoint counsel for Johnson.

In House v. State, 130 Fla. 400, 177 So. 705, House made application to the Florida Supreme Court for leave to apply to the trial court for writ of error coram nobis. In said application he raised a similar constitutional question by alleging that he had been deprived of the right to avail himself of the services of counsel employed by him. The Florida Supreme Court said:

"It thus appears that, if the allegations of the petition are true, serious and reversible error was committed by the trial court, which could have been availed of on ordinary writ of error, but which cannot be made the basis of a writ of error coram nobis, as it is not made to appear that the trial court (and petitioner as well) was without knowledge of the facts complained of when the pleas of guilty and judgments thereon were entered." (Emphasis supplied).

So, it is definitely established that direct appeal was a proper method of presenting to the Supreme Court of Florida the petitioner's contention that the trial court erred in refusing to appoint counsel for him.

The record in the case at bar is silent as to whether or not the petitioner's request for the appointment of counsel and the refusal of said request appeared of record in the Criminal Court of Record of Palm Beach County, Florida, in which Court the petitioner was convicted.

If the said trial court's record of the case did show such request and refusal, then the petitioner, upon taking an appeal at any time within ninety days after his conviction, could have taken said record to the Supreme Court of Florida as the basis for assigning such refusal as error. The ninety days allowed for appeal had not expired when the Supreme Court of Florida dismissed the appeal in the habeas corpus suit on May 14, 1945 (Tr. 7).

If the trial court's record did not show such request and refusal, the record could have been made to show the same by alleging the request and refusal in a motion for new trial, supported by affidavit or proof, and by obtaining the trial court's ruling that said allegation was true.

Motions for new trial may be filed as a matter of right within four days after verdict, and the trial court has the discretion to allow fifteen days. Section 920.02(3), Florida Statutes 1941.

The following portions of Section 920.05, Florida Statutes 1941, authorized the petitioner to raise in a motion for new trial the question of the trial court's refusal to appoint counsel, to-wit:

"(1) The court shall grant a new trial if any of the following grounds are established, provided the substantial rights of the defendant have been prejudiced:

* * * *

"(f) That the court has erred in the decision of any matter of law arising during the course of the trial;

* * * *

"The court shall also grant a new trial when from any other cause not due to his own fault the defendant has not received a fair and impartial trial, or the sentence exceeds the penalty provided for by law."

Such an allegation in a motion for new trial would have raised a question of fact which the trial judge would have been authorized to decide, upon evidence presented by affidavit or otherwise, under Section 920.07(2), Florida Statutes 1941, which reads as follows:

"(2) Where a motion for a new trial calls for the decision of any question of fact the court may hear evidence on such motion by affidavit or otherwise."

The Circuit Court's order quashing the writ of habeas corpus recited that "This cause was heard, after due notice, upon the motion of the State Attorney to quash the writ of habeas corpus, and argument of counsel." (Tr. 5). This showed that the petitioner was represented by counsel in the habeas corpus proceeding, which was commenced on March 16, 1945 (Tr. 6), well within the four days allowed to file motion for new trial as a matter of right.

Therefore, even if the trial court's record was silent as to the request for appointment of counsel and the denial of the request, the petitioner's counsel could easily have made said request and denial a part of the record for appeal purposes by alleging the same in a motion for new trial and, upon supporting proof, procuring a ruling establishing the truth of the allegation. Then, if the motion had been denied, the appellant would have had an unimpeachable record upon which to raise the question on appeal. And, if he had taken such a direct appeal, and had lost in the Florida Supreme Court, he could have applied to this Court for certiorari and would not have been entitled to invoke habeas corpus relief in the Federal Court without doing so. White v. Ragen, 324 U. S. 760.

We recognize that, in certain types of cases, this Court has held that the failure to take a direct appeal from a conviction did not bar a resort to habeas corpus.

For example, in Johnson v. Zerbst, 304 U. S. 458, where the conviction was in the Federal Court and where the question of the right to have counsel appointed arose under the Sixth Amendment, no appeal was taken from the conviction within the time allowed by law. This Court ruled that Johnson was entitled to resort to habeas corpus in the Federal Court, despite his failure to perfect a direct appeal, but, in so ruling, this Court said:

"Petitioner, convicted and sentenced without the assistance of Counsel, contends that he was ignorant of his right to Counsel, and incapable of preserving his legal and constitutional rights during trial. Urging that—after conviction—he was unable to obtain a lawyer, was ignorant of the proceedings to obtain new trial or appeal and the time limits governing both; and that he did not possess the requisite skill or knowledge properly to conduct an appeal, he says that it was—as a practical matter—impossible for him to obtain relief by appeal. If these contentions be true in fact, it necessarily follows that no legal procedural remedy is available to grant relief for a violation of constitutional rights, unless the courts protect petitioner's rights by habeas corpus." (Emphasis supplied).

It thus appears that this Court took cognizance of Johnson's inability to appeal because of lack of counsel and ignorance of appellate proceedings. No such situation excuses the failure of the petitioner in the instant case to take a direct appeal, because he had counsel in ample time to have presented his point by direct appeal from his conviction.

For further example, in Smith v. O'Grady, 312 U. S. 329, although Smith had not appealed from his original conviction, this failure was not considered a bar to subsequent habeas corpus proceedings in the State Courts of Nebraska. However, as was pointed out in this Court's opinion, Smith had an unanswerably good reason for not taking a direct appeal, viz.:

"Because of his ignorance of his rights, and because of the trial court's failure to appoint, and his inability to obtain, counsel, the original sentence was not appealed."

The petitioner in the case at bar had no such excuse for not appealing from his conviction, because he had counsel within one day after his conviction and could have appealed had he so desired.

For further example, in Williams v. Kaiser, 323 U. S. 471, this Court considered that Williams' failure to appeal from his conviction was not a bar to raising in a subsequent habeas corpus proceeding in the state courts of Missouri the question of denial of counsel. In arriving at that conclusion, this Court said:

"Missouri, however, does contend that the denial of counsel could have been challenged by petitioner by an appeal, that no appeal was taken, and that no extraordinary circumstances are shown which excuse that failure. Heretofore we have not considered a failure to appeal an adequate defense to habeas corpus in this type of case. Smith v. O'Grady, 312 U. S. 329, 85 L. Ed 859, 61 S. Ct. 572, supra. Under these circumstances the failure to appeal only emphasizes the need of counsel. If an appeal were made such a requirement, the denial of counsel would in and of itself defeat the very right which the Constitution sought to protect." (Emphasis supplied).

We infer from the above quoted statement of this Court that Williams was excused for his failure to take

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 40.—OCTOBER TERM, 1947.

Donald Wade, Petitioner, v. Nathan Mayo, as State Prison Custodian of the State of Florida.	} On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Cir- cuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.
---	---

[June 14, 1948.]

MR. JUSTICE MURPHY delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case centers on two issues: (1) whether it was proper for a federal district court to entertain a habeas corpus petition filed by a state prisoner who, having secured a ruling from the highest state court on his federal constitutional claim, had failed to seek a writ of certiorari in this Court; (2) whether the federal district court correctly held that the prisoner had been deprived of his constitutional right to counsel at the trial for a non-capital state offense.

On February 19, 1945, petitioner Wade was arrested in Palm Beach County, Florida, upon the charge of breaking and entering. He was held in jail until brought to trial before a jury on March 14, 1945, in the Criminal Court of Record of Palm Beach County. Just before the trial started, he asked the trial judge to appoint counsel to represent him, claiming that it was financially impossible to employ one himself. The judge refused the request and the trial proceeded. The jury returned a verdict of guilty on the same day and Wade was immediately sentenced to serve five years in the state penitentiary.

Wade then obtained the aid of counsel. On March 16, two days after the trial and conviction, this counsel filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus in the Circuit Court of Palm Beach County. The petition claimed that the refusal of the judge to appoint counsel for Wade at the trial was a denial of the due process of law guaranteed to him by the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The writ was issued, a hearing was had, and the Circuit Court thereupon granted the motion of the state's attorney to quash the writ. This action was taken on the authority of two decisions of the Supreme Court of Florida holding that under Florida law a trial court has no duty to appoint counsel to represent the accused in a non-capital case. Watson v. State, 142 Fla. 218, 194 So. 640; Johnson v. State, 148 Fla. 510, 4 So. 2d 671.

Wade's counsel appealed the decision of the Circuit Court to the Supreme Court of Florida. In the latter court, the state's Attorney General filed a motion to dismiss the appeal as frivolous. Two points were emphasized in this motion: (1) Wade had not appealed from his conviction or even filed a motion for a new trial; (2) the Circuit Court had quashed the habeas corpus writ on the authority of the two cases cited in its order. The Supreme Court, upon consideration of this motion, granted the motion and dismissed the appeal. No written opinion was filed and no indication was given whether the appeal was dismissed for one or both of the reasons advanced by the Attorney General. The date of this action was May 14, 1945. No attempt was made to secure a writ of certiorari from this Court.

Nearly a year later, on May 8, 1946, a petition for a writ of habeas corpus was filed in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida. This petition alleged that the refusal to appoint counsel for Wade at the trial deprived him of his constitutional right to due process of law. And the petition further stated that this point had not been raised by way of appeal.

from the conviction because of the belief that the Watson and Johnson cases made it plain that the Supreme Court of Florida "has no power of reversal of a conviction because defendants were not represented by counsel, and for that reason failed to obtain a fair trial, except in capital cases, and this case is not a capital case." Such was the reason given for the belief that an appeal would have been useless and of no avail. But the petition pointed out that in order to exhaust all his remedies in the state courts before applying to a federal court, Wade had pursued a writ of habeas corpus all the way through the Florida courts.

The District Court granted the writ and a hearing was held on May 17, 1946. Both Wade and the trial judge testified as to the events surrounding the refusal to appoint counsel. After hearing this testimony and the argument of counsel, the District Court concluded that under the circumstances the denial of Wade's request was contrary to the due process guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment, thereby rendering void the judgment and commitment under which Wade was held. But the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed, holding that the Fourteenth Amendment did not require the appointment of counsel in non-capital state cases unless the state law so required. 158 F. 2d 614.

We then granted certiorari. After the case had been submitted to us on briefs, we ordered the case restored to the docket for reargument on two points: "(1) the propriety of the exercise of jurisdiction by the District Court in this case when it appears of record, in the state's motion for dismissal of the appeal on habeas corpus, that petitioner had not availed himself of the remedy of appeal from his conviction, apparently open after trial though now barred by limitation . . . (2) whether the failure of Florida to make this objection in this proceeding affects the above problem."

In our view, it was proper for the District Court to entertain Wade's petition for a writ of habeas corpus and to proceed to a determination of the merits of Wade's constitutional claim. The crucial point is that Wade has exhausted one of the two alternative routes open in the Florida courts for securing an answer to his constitutional objection. It now appears that a defendant who is denied counsel in a non-capital case in Florida may attack the constitutionality of such treatment either by the direct method of an appeal from the conviction or by the collateral method of habeas corpus. Since Wade chose the latter alternative and pursued it through to the Supreme Court of Florida, he has done all that could be done to secure a determination of his claim by the Florida courts. The fact that he might have appealed his conviction and made the same claim and received the same answer does not detract from the completeness with which Florida has disposed of his claim on habeas corpus. The exhaustion of but one of several available alternatives is all that is necessary.

At the time the Supreme Court of Florida dismissed Wade's habeas corpus appeal, however, the propriety of the habeas corpus method of raising the right of counsel issue was anything but clear. The failure of that court to specify the reason for the dismissal made it possible to construe the action as a holding that a direct appeal from the conviction was the only remedy available to Wade. The Attorney General's motion to dismiss the habeas corpus appeal seemed to make that point and the Supreme Court might have adopted it as the sole ground of dismissal. Had that been the situation, the case before us would be in an entirely different posture. Wade would then be in the position of seeking relief in a federal court after having chosen to forego the opportunity to secure recognition of his claim by the exclusive mode designated by Florida.

But the doubts as to the availability of habeas corpus in Florida for the purpose at hand have been dispelled by the subsequent decision of the Supreme Court of Florida in Johnson v. Mayo, 158 Fla. 264, 28 So. 2d 585. That case was a habeas corpus proceeding in which the Florida court proceeded to pass upon the merits of a claim identical with that raised by Wade. In so doing, the court relied upon the disposition of Wade's habeas corpus appeal, stating that it had been dismissed as frivolous. As the Johnson case makes clear, Wade's appeal was considered frivolous because the right to counsel in a non-capital case is counter to the settled law of Florida. Reference was made in the Johnson decision to the contrary decisions in other states and to "the rule in the Federal Courts but we are of the view that those decisions do not control in Florida." 158 Fla. at 266; 28 So. 2d at 586.

Thus the Supreme Court of Florida announced unambiguously less than a year and a half after its dismissal of Wade's appeal that its action had been grounded on the merits of the constitutional issue tendered by Wade, rather than on a holding that a direct appeal was the only way to raise that issue. It is not for us to contradict this construction by the Florida court and to attribute the dismissal of Wade's appeal to a state ground of procedure which is negated by both the decision and the reasoning in the later Johnson case.

The only real problem in this case concerning the propriety of the District Court entertaining Wade's petition relates to the effect of his failure to seek a writ of certiorari from this Court following the action of the Supreme Court of Florida on his habeas corpus appeal. It has been said that "Ordinarily an application for habeas corpus by one detained under a state court judgment of conviction for crime will be entertained by a federal court only after all state remedies available, including all appellate remedies in the state courts and in this Court by appeal or writ of certiorari, have been exhausted." Ex parte Hawk, 321 U. S. 114, 116-117. The problem is to reexamine this statement in the light of the facts of this case.

The requirement that state remedies be exhausted before relief is sought in the federal courts is grounded primarily upon the respect which federal courts have for the state judicial processes and upon the administrative necessities of the federal judiciary. State courts are duty bound to give full effect to federal constitutional rights and it cannot be assumed that they will be derelict in their duty. Only after state remedies have been exhausted without the federal claim having been vindicated may federal courts properly intervene. Indeed, any other rule would visit upon the federal courts an impossible burden, forcing them to supervise the countless state criminal proceedings in which deprivations of federal constitutional rights are alleged.

But the reasons for this exhaustion principle cease after the highest state court has rendered a decision on the merits of the federal constitutional claim. The state procedure has then ended and there is no longer any danger of a collision between federal and state authority. The problem shifts from the consummation of state remedies to the nature and extent of the federal review of the constitutional issue. The exertion of such review at this point, however, is not in any real sense a part of the state procedure. It is an invocation of federal authority growing out of the supremacy of the Federal Constitution and the necessity of giving effect to that supremacy if the state processes have failed to do so.

After state procedure has been exhausted, the concern is with the appropriate federal forum in which to pursue further the constitutional claim. The choice lies between applying directly to this Court for review of the constitutional issue by certiorari or instituting an original habeas corpus proceeding in a federal district court. Considerations of prompt and orderly procedure in the federal courts will often dictate that direct review be sought first in this Court. And where a prisoner has neglected to seek that review, such failure may be a relevant consideration for a district court in determining whether to entertain a subsequent habeas corpus petition.

But the factors which make it desirable to present the constitutional issue directly, and initially to this Court do not justify a hard and fast rule to that effect, especially in view of the volume of this Court's business. Writs of certiorari are matters of grace. Matters relevant to the exercise of our certiorari discretion frequently result in denials of the writ without any consideration of the merits. The constitutional issue may thus have no bearing upon the denial of the writ. Where it is apparent or even possible that such would be the disposition of a petition for certiorari from the state court's judgment, failure to file a petition should not prejudice the right to file a habeas corpus application in a district court. Good judicial administration is not furthered by insistence on futile procedure.

Moreover, the flexible nature of the writ of habeas corpus counsels against erecting a rigid procedural rule that has the effect of imposing a new jurisdictional limitation on the writ. Habeas corpus is presently available for use by a district court within its recognized jurisdiction whenever necessary to prevent an unjust and illegal deprivation of human liberty. Cf. Price v. Johnston, 334 U. S. — (slip opinion, p. 15). Where the matter is otherwise within the jurisdiction of the district court, it is within the discretion of that court to weigh the failure to seek certiorari against the miscarriage of justice that might result from a failure to grant relief. In short, we refuse to codify the failure to invoke the discretionary certiorari powers of this Court into an absolute denial of the district court's power to entertain a habeas corpus application. The prevention of undue restraints on liberty is more important than mechanical and unrealistic administration of the federal courts.

Fear has sometimes been expressed that the exercise of the district court's power to entertain habeas corpus petitions under these circumstances might give rise to frequent instances of a single federal judge upsetting the judgment of a state court, often the highest court of the state. But to restrict the writ of habeas corpus for such reason is to limit it on the basis of a discredited fear. Experience has demonstrated that district court judges have used this power sparingly and that only in a negligible number of instances have convictions sustained by state courts been reversed. Statistics compiled by the Administrative Office of the United States Courts show that during the fiscal years of 1943, 1944 and 1945 there was an average of 451 habeas corpus petitions filed each year in federal district courts by prisoners serving state court sentences; of these petitions, an average of but 6 per year resulted in a reversal of the conviction and a release of the prisoner. The releases thus constituted only 1.3% of the total petitions filed. In light of such figures, it cannot be said that federal judges have lightly exercised their power to release prisoners held under the authority of a state. See Ex parte Royall, 117 U. S. 241, 253.

In the instant case, we believe that it was well within the discretion of the District Court to consider Wade's petition for a writ of habeas corpus. The Florida courts had given a full and conclusive answer to his claim that he had been denied his constitutional right to counsel. No other remedies were available in Florida. True, he did not seek certiorari following the dismissal of his habeas corpus appeal by the Supreme Court of Florida. But at the time of that dismissal, it was extremely doubtful, to say the least, whether the constitutional issue had really been decided. That doubt was such as to make it reasonably certain that this Court would have denied certiorari on the theory that an adequate state ground appeared to underlie the judgment. His failure to make this futile attempt to secure certiorari accordingly should not prejudice his subsequent petition for habeas corpus in the District Court. Otherwise he would be left completely remediless, having been unable to secure relief from the Florida courts and being barred from invoking the aid of the federal courts.

As to the merits of Wade's constitutional claim, the District Court made the following findings after a hearing at which Wade and the trial judge gave testimony:

"The Court has heard the evidence of the respective parties and the argument of their counsel. It appears that petitioner, at the time of his trial in the Criminal Court of Record of Palm Beach, Florida, was eighteen years old, and though not wholly a stranger to the Court Room, having been convicted of prior offenses, was still an inexperienced youth unfamiliar with Court procedure, and not capable of adequately representing himself. It is admitted by the Judge who presided at petitioner's trial on March 6, 1945 that petitioner in open Court, before trial commenced, requested said Judge to appoint counsel for him, but the request was denied and petitioner placed on trial without counsel. . . . The denial of petitioner's request in the circumstances here involved constitutes a denial of due process, contrary to the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitution, which renders void the judgment and commitment under which petitioner is held. . . ."

As the Circuit Court of Appeals pointed out, the evidence at the hearing before the District Court further showed that during the progress of the trial Wade (a) was advised by the trial judge of his right to challenge jurors and excuse as many as six without reason; a right which he did not exercise; (b) was afforded an opportunity, which he accepted, to cross-examine state witnesses; (c) took the stand and testified in his own behalf; and (d) was offered the privilege of arguing his case to the jury but declined, as did the prosecuting attorney.

We are not disposed to disagree with the findings and conclusion of the District Court. Its determination was a purely factual one to the effect that Wade was an inexperienced youth incapable of adequately representing himself even in a trial which apparently involved no complicated legal questions. This is a judgment which is peculiarly within the province of the trier of facts, based upon personal observation of Wade. And we do not find that the District Court's determination was clearly erroneous.

There are some individuals who, by reason of age, ignorance or mental capacity, are incapable of representing themselves adequately in a prosecution of a relatively simple nature. This incapacity is purely personal and can be determined only by an examination and observation of the individual. Where such incapacity is present, the refusal to appoint counsel is a denial of due process of law under the Fourteenth Amendment.

The Circuit Court of Appeals was therefore in error in reversing the District Court's judgment. It was also in error in assuming that the failure to appoint counsel in a non-capital case in a state court is a denial of due process under the Fourteenth Amendment only if the law of the state requires such an appointment. To the extent that there is a constitutional right to counsel in this type of case it stems directly from the Fourteenth Amendment and not from state statutes. Betts v. Brady, 316 U. S. 455, 473.

Reversed.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 40.—OCTOBER TERM, 1947.

Donald Wade, Petitioner,
v.
Nathan Mayo, as State Prison
Custodian of the State of Florida.

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

[June 14, 1948.]

MR. JUSTICE REED, dissenting.

Donald Wade was brought to trial March 14, 1945, in the Criminal Court of Record of Palm Beach County, Florida. On the same day, after proceedings before the presiding judge in which Wade represented himself, he was convicted of the crime of breaking and entering, and sentenced to five years' imprisonment. Wade did not appeal his conviction, but on March 16, 1945, having obtained the aid of counsel, he brought a petition for a writ of habeas corpus in the Circuit Court of Palm Beach County; on March 22, 1945, that court quashed the writ; an appeal from the order quashing the writ was taken to the Supreme Court of Florida and on May 14, 1945, that court dismissed the appeal without stating whether it disposed of the case on the merits or upon a procedural ground.¹ However, in a later case, Johnson v. Mayo, 158 Fla. 264, the Florida Supreme Court indicated that its ruling in the Wade case had been upon the merits. For the purposes of this opinion, I assume that this decision was upon the merits. Wade failed to bring a writ of certiorari to this Court to review the action of the state Supreme Court. On May 8, 1946, a petition for a writ of habeas corpus was filed in the federal District Court for the Southern District of Florida. The writ was granted and a hearing set for May 17, 1946. At the hearing the court examined Wade's claim that he had been deprived of his constitutional rights by the failure of Florida to furnish him with counsel. It concluded that Wade had been deprived of those rights and ordered that he be released from the custody of the respondent, Mayo, and be remanded to the custody of the sheriff of Palm Beach County, Florida, to be held for any further proceedings which the state should take. On appeal, the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit reversed the lower court. It held that the Constitution does not require that a state furnish counsel to one in the position of Wade. It based this conclusion, we think, from examination of its opinion, on Betts v. Brady, 316 U. S. 455, not on any ruling that state law determines the necessity for the appointment of counsel in state cases in all non-capital prosecutions.² We granted certiorari, 331 U. S. 801; the case was submitted to us; on November 10, 1947, we ordered the case restored to the docket for reargument, directing that counsel discuss these questions: "(1) the propriety of the exercise of jurisdiction by the District Court in this case when it appears of record, in the state's motion for dismissal of the appeal on habeas corpus, that petitioner had not availed himself of the remedy of appeal from his conviction, apparently open after trial though now barred by limitation . . . ; (2) whether the failure of Florida to make this objection in this proceeding affects the above problem."

¹ Wade v. Kirk, 155 Fla. 906.

I.

The first question in this case is whether Wade's failure to bring a writ of certiorari to this Court from the judgment of the Florida Supreme Court in his state habeas corpus proceeding should affect his effort to obtain release through a federal writ of habeas corpus. Or, to rephrase the problem, should certiorari to this Court be considered a part of the state remedy for purposes of the well-recognized doctrine of exhaustion of state remedies? Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103.

² Mayo v. Wade, 158 F. 2d 614.

This inquiry may be started by considering Ex parte Hawk, 321 U. S. 114. The unanimous opinion in this case was handed down January 31, 1944. Hawk had made a motion for leave to file a writ of habeas corpus in this Court. His application was denied on the ground that he had failed to exhaust the state remedies available to him. The opinion in Hawk's case, however, has been understood by this and other courts as having been designed to give direction for procedure to advise federal courts in their consideration of applications for habeas corpus brought by a person confined under a state criminal conviction.³ One of the rules which this Court prescribed governs the issue now under consideration.

"Ordinarily an application for habeas corpus by one detained under a state court judgment of conviction for crime will be entertained by a federal court only after all state remedies available, including all appellate remedies in the state courts and in this

³ This Court has, in a number of instances, through its Clerk, distributed this opinion to state prisoners seeking habeas corpus relief in federal courts.

Potter v. Dowd, 146 F. 2d 244, 248: "The Hawk decision is the latest of the Supreme Court on the subject. It was no doubt intended to enlighten the Federal inferior courts so that the rather difficult road which they must travel will have fewer obstructions. Also, the convict who believes he has been denied rights guaranteed him by the Federal Constitution will find the proper judicial haven he is seeking."

WADE v. MAYO.

Court by appeal or writ of certiorari, have been exhausted. Tinsley v. Anderson, 171 U. S. 101, 104-5; Urquhart v. Brown, 205 U. S. 179; United States ex rel. Kennedy v. Tyler, 269 U. S. 13; Mooney v. Holohan, supra, 115; Ex parte Abernathy, 320 U. S. 219."

After a person, protected by the presumption of innocence, has been convicted by a state trial court and his conviction has been subjected either to direct or collateral attacks in the state courts,⁵ wise administration commands that this Court be asked, by appeal or certiorari, to pass upon the federal constitutional questions presented.⁶ It is only by such a procedure that the validity of state criminal conviction can be expeditiously and finally adjudicated.⁷

The lower federal courts have consistently followed this rule of practice: Some district judges have used form letters which they sent to convicts confined in state prisons who sought habeas corpus.⁸ In Gordon v. Scudder, 163

⁵ Ex parte Hawk, supra, at 116-17.

⁶ If a state judgment is based upon an adequate state ground, a failure to request review by this Court does not prejudice the prisoner. White v. Ragen, 324 U. S. 760, 767; House v. Mayo, 324 U. S. 42, 48.

⁷ At pp. 8-9, infra, I comment upon the delicate nature of the federal habeas corpus jurisdiction over state convictions. Those observations are relevant here.

⁸ See pp. 11-12, infra.

⁹ An example of such a letter appears in the record in Ex parte Hanley, 322 U. S. 708.

"Your petition for writ of habeas corpus has been received and examined. From such examination, it appears that, if filed, your petition would have to be dismissed for the reason that it does not appear therefrom that you have exhausted your remedies in the Supreme Court of the United States, in accordance with the sug-

F. 2d 518, the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit applied the rule to a state habeas corpus proceeding in which the habeas corpus had been denied without opinion. All of the circuit courts which have considered this rule have approved it."

Today the Court both limits and confuses the doctrine of exhaustion of state remedies so clearly expounded in Ex parte Hawk, supra. Certainty in habeas corpus procedure for review of state convictions is essential so that the applicant may know the way to test the constitutionality of his conviction and so that the public and its judicial system may be spared undue expense and interference from a succession of petitions that cannot be considered on the merits because of procedural defects. The gestion contained in a recent opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Ex parte Henry Hawk (filed January 31, 1944), wherein the court said:

"Ordinarily an application for habeas corpus by one detained under a state court judgment of conviction for crime will be entertained by a federal court only after all state remedies available, including all appellate remedies in the state courts and in this court by appeal or writ of certiorari, have been exhausted."

Accordingly, your petition has not been filed and is returned herewith. If, however, you desire to make a record in this court, you may return the petition (referring to this letter) with the request that it be filed, and it will be filed in the office of the clerk of this court.

"I do not wish to be understood as expressing any opinion on the merits of your case."

* See Lyon v. Harkness, 151 F. 2d 731, 733 (C. C. A. 1st); Monsky v. Warden of Clinton State Prison, 163 F. 2d 978, 979 (C. C. A. 2d); Stonebreaker v. Smyth, 163 F. 2d 498, 501-502 (C. C. A. 4th); Nusser v. Aderhold, 164 F. 2d 127 (C. C. A. 5th); Makowski v. Benson, 158 F. 2d 158 (C. C. A. 6th); Ross v. Nierstheimer, 150 F. 2d 994 (C. C. A. 7th); Guy v. Utecht, 144 F. 2d 913, 915 (C. C. A. 8th); Gordon v. Scudder, supra (C. C. A. 9th); Herzog v. Colpoys, 143 F. 2d 137, 138 (App. D. C.).

serious and difficult problems of habeas corpus procedure in the federal courts cannot be solved by rules which have as their very core vagueness and uncertainty.¹⁰ I conclude that certiorari should be considered a part of the state procedure for purposes of habeas corpus.

II.

The next issue is this. Can Wade, having failed to use a state remedy once available¹¹—appeal—and having failed to take a writ of certiorari to this Court from the denial of his state habeas corpus, with no conditions existing or claimed that restricted his ability to proceed in the regular course in the handling of his case after verdict, obtain relief in a federal habeas corpus proceeding for an alleged deprivation of his constitutional right to counsel when it appears that no state remedy in which relief can be obtained is now available?¹²

The federal courts have the power to discharge upon a writ of habeas corpus "a prisoner . . . in custody in violation of the Constitution . . . of the United ¹⁰ Cf. dissent in Maggio v. Zeitz, 333 U. S. 56, 81.

¹¹ "An appeal . . . may be taken only within ninety days after the judgment or sentence appealed from is entered, except that an appeal from both judgment and sentence may be taken within ninety days after the sentence is entered." 24 Fla. Stat. Ann. § 924.09.

¹² Florida provides two devices for collateral attack upon criminal convictions: habeas corpus and coram nobis. Wade has tried habeas corpus and failed. Wade v. Kirk, 155 Fla. 906. Coram nobis is available only to bring to the attention of the court specific facts, existing at the time of the trial, but not shown by the record and not known by the court or by the defendant or his counsel at the time of the trial. Lamb v. State, 91 Fla. 396. See House v. State, 130 Fla. 400; cf. Hysler v. Florida, 315 U. S. 411, 415-16. The facts upon which Wade seeks relief were known, during the course of the trial, both to himself and to the trial judge.

States¹³ This Court held in Frank v. Mangum, that this writ is a proper procedure "to safeguard the liberty of all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States against infringement through any violation of the Constitution"¹⁴ The dissent in the Frank case agreed with the Court's theory of the availability of habeas corpus, saying at p. 346: "But habeas corpus cuts through all forms and goes to the very tissue of the structure. It comes in from the outside, not in subordination to the proceedings, and although every form may have been preserved opens the inquiry whether they have been more than an empty shell." As Wade alleged a deprivation of his constitutional rights, the district court had jurisdiction to entertain the petition for the writ of habeas corpus.

Habeas corpus is, however, a discretionary writ.¹⁵ Thus, the question presented is this: Was it proper for the district court to exercise its jurisdiction when it appeared of record that Wade had not availed himself of the remedy of appeal, open after trial though now barred by limitation and had failed to exhaust, by writ of certiorari, the state remedy of habeas corpus? An answer to this problem can best be derived from a consideration of the nature and function of habeas corpus in a federal system of government, the relevant precedents and analogies drawn from the decided habeas corpus cases, and the resolution of similar questions in related fields.

¹³ 28 U. S. C. §§ 451-53. Under the Judiciary Act of 1789, the writ could not issue if the prisoner was held under final process based upon a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction. Ex parte Watkins, 3 Pet. 193. Congress expanded the power of the federal courts to issue the writ in situations in which the federal Constitution has been violated by the Act of February 5, 1867. 14 Stat. 385, ch. 28; see Hawk v. Olson, 326 U. S. 271, 274-75; Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S. 309, 330-32.

¹⁴ Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S. 309, 331.

¹⁵ Ex parte Royall, 117 U. S. 241, 250 et seq.; In re Wood, 140 U. S. 278, 290; Cook v. Hart, 146 U. S. 183, 195; In re Frederick, 149 U. S. 70, 75; New York v. Eno, 155 U. S. 89; In re Lincoln, 202 U. S. 178, 181; Urquhart v. Brown, 205 U. S. 179; Salinger v. Loisel, 265 U. S. 224, 231; Goto v. Lane, 265 U. S. 393, 403; United States ex rel. Kennedy v. Tyler, 269 U. S. 13, 17; Ex parte Hawk, 321 U. S. 114.

State judicial systems are designed to provide places of trial for offenders against the criminal laws of their respective states. State courts equally with federal courts administer justice under the authority and limitations of the Constitution of the United States, the supreme law of the land, binding the judges in every state "any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding."¹⁶ Thus, whenever a prisoner brings a petition for a writ of habeas corpus in the federal courts challenging collaterally a conviction in the state courts and asking release from state custody, serious questions of the relation between the federal and state judicial structures are raised. "It is an exceedingly delicate jurisdiction given to the Federal courts by which a person under indictment in a state court and subject to its laws may, by a decision of a single judge of a Federal court, upon a writ of habeas corpus, be taken out of the custody of the officers of the State and finally discharged therefrom . . ."¹⁷ Respect for the theory and practice of our dual system of government requires that federal courts intervene by habeas corpus in state criminal prosecutions only in exceptional circumstances. Their duty compels them to act where the state fails to provide a remedy for violations of constitutional rights but due regard for a state's system of justice admonishes federal courts to be chary of allowing the extraordinary writ of habeas corpus where the accused, without excuse, has not exhausted the remedies offered by the State to redress violations of federal constitutional rights.¹⁸

¹⁶ Const., Art. VI; Robb v. Connolly, 111 U. S. 624, 637.

¹⁷ Baker v. Grice, 169 U. S. 284, 291.

The desirability of discretionary limitation of the habeas corpus power of federal courts in respect to state criminal prosecutions which inheres in the dual sovereignties of the federal system is re-enforced by considerations of practical administration: (1) it is not to be assumed that state courts deliberately deny to the individual his rights under the Federal Constitution; (2) the normal paths of review—appeal and petition for certiorari—are open to correct federal constitutional errors in state criminal proceedings; (3) extravagant exercise of federal jurisdiction would furnish another technique of delay in a criminal system which often permits long periods of time to elapse between sentencing and execution of sentence.

Because of the above reasons, the federal courts exercise their habeas corpus jurisdiction where an individual is in the custody of a state in limited types of situations. For example: (1) where all state remedies have been exhausted; (2) where the state remedy is seriously inadequate;¹⁹ and (3) where a state attempts to interfere improperly with the Federal Government.

The third class of cases represents the largest group of situations in which federal courts exercise habeas corpus jurisdiction without the exhaustion of state remedies. The cases of this type which have come before this Court are examples of the use of habeas corpus to prevent state interference with the administration of a branch of the ¹⁸ See Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S. 309, 329; Ex parte Royall, 117 U. S. 241, 247-54; Mooney v. Holohan, supra.

¹⁹ See Ex parte Hawk; 321 U. S. 114, 118.

Federal Government,²⁰ or with a federal agency,²¹ or with treaty rights of the United States.²²

The second class is represented in this Court by only one case, Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U. S. 86. There exhaustion of state remedies was not required.²³ "We assume in accordance with that case [Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S. 309, 335] that the corrective process supplied by the State may be so adequate that interference by habeas corpus ought not to be allowed. . . . But if the case is that the whole proceeding is a mask—that counsel, jury and judge were swept to the fatal end by an irresistible wave of public passion, and that the State Courts failed to correct the wrongs, neither perfection in the machinery for correction nor the possibility that the trial court and counsel saw no other way of avoiding an immediate outbreak of the mob can prevent this Court from securing to the petitioners their constitutional rights."²⁴ That Moore's case is unique, emphasizes its unusual nature; this Court has not again been compelled to resort to this extreme procedure to protect constitutional rights.

The greatest number of habeas corpus cases in the federal courts fall into class one. In Ex parte Hawk, supra, we stated the principle which governs these cases: "Ordinarily an application for habeas corpus by one detained under a state judgment of conviction for crime will be entertained by a federal court only after

²⁰ In re Neagle, 135 U. S. 1; Hunter v. Wood, 209 U. S. 205 (impairment of the functions of the federal courts); In re Loney, 134 U. S. 372 (impairment of the functions of the legislative and judicial branches of the Federal Government).

²¹ Boske v. Comingore, 177 U. S. 459; Ohio v. Thomas, 173 U. S. 276.

²² Wildenhus's Case, 120 U. S. 1.

²³ See State v. Martineau, 149 Ark. 237.

²⁴ Moore v. Dempsey, supra, at 91.

all state remedies available, including all appellate remedies in the state courts and in this Court by appeal or writ of certiorari, have been exhausted. . . .²⁵ Litigation of this category offers the best example of the general principle of federal-habeas-corpus restraint. The insistence that state remedies be exhausted is but a concise statement of the proposition that state courts must, in all but the most exceptional cases, be the forums in which all the problems incident to a state criminal prosecution are to be answered.

Where a state offers an adequate remedy for the correction of errors in criminal trials, that remedy must be followed. Where there is a denial of constitutional rights by the highest court of a state, a remedy exists by direct review in this Court.²⁶ An accused should not be permitted to reserve grounds for a habeas corpus petition in federal courts which would have furnished a basis for a review in regular course in the state court; not even when those grounds are that the accused was denied a constitutional right by a state court subject to reversal by a higher state court.²⁷ To permit such trifling with state criminal law would disrupt its efficient administration. The federal court's refusal of consideration depends on the rule that the federal courts should not utilize habeas corpus to take the place of state remedies except in extraordinary situations where otherwise the accused would be "remediless."²⁸ It is not seemly that years after a conviction, when time has dulled memories, when death has stilled tongues, when records are unavailable, convicted felons, unburdened by any handicap to a normal presentation of any claim of unfairness in their trial, should be permitted to attack their sentences collaterally by habeas corpus because of errors, known to them at the time of trial. When it is shown by the record that a petitioner in a federal court for relief from a state conviction that involves a denial of constitutional rights has without adequate excuse failed to use an available state judicial remedy, although all such remedies are now barred to him by limitation, I think that federal courts should not intervene to correct the error.

²⁵ Ex parte Hawk, supra, at 116-17.

²⁶ Powell v. Alabama, 287 U. S. 45; Urquhart v. Brown, 205 U. S. 179.

²⁷ Andrews v. Swartz, 156 U. S. 272, 276; In re Wood, 140 U. S. 278, 289; Ex parte Spencer, 228 U. S. 652. See Glasgow v. Moyer, 225 U. S. 420, 430; Waley v. Johnston, 316 U. S. 101, 105; Sunal v. Large, 332 U. S. 174; Bowen v. Johnston, 306 U. S. 19, 27: "The rule is not one defining power but one which relates to the appropriate exercise of power."

In Goto v. Lane, 265 U. S. 393, this Court was asked to consider the issue of whether a group of prisoners, convicted of a crime in the territorial courts of Hawaii, had the right to raise in a habeas corpus proceeding brought in a federal district court alleged deprivations of their constitutional rights. The Court said: "And, if the petitioners permitted the time within which a review on writ of error might be obtained to elapse, and thereby lost the opportunity for such a review, that gave no right to resort to habeas corpus as a substitute."²⁹ The Court found no reasons which in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, excused the petitioners from seeking review by writ of error. Consequently, it affirmed the judgment of the district court which had refused to issue the writ. This case is a persuasive precedent in the situation now before us because the state courts of the forty-eight states and the territorial courts of Hawaii stood, in 1924, in similar positions in relation to the federal judicial structure. As the scope of review of this Court in criminal cases from state courts and Hawaiian territorial courts was then the same, no valid distinctions can be drawn between Goto's case and the situation now before us.³⁰

²⁸ Ex parte Hawk, supra, 117-18. See Adams v. McCann, 317 U. S. 269, 274; United States ex rel. Kennedy v. Tyler, 269 U. S. 13, 17.

²⁹ Goto v. Lane, supra, at 402. See also Urquhart v. Brown, 205 U. S. 179; Riddle v. Dyche, 262 U. S. 333; Craig v. Hecht, 263 U. S. 255, 277.

It should not be thought that the practice which I would follow represents the sole instance in our jurisprudence of the loss of the right to press constitutional questions because of failure on the part of the individual to raise those issues properly or in time. The principle that federal constitutional questions must be properly raised in state courts before they will be considered by this Court is too well established to require citation. In a case decided this Term, Parker v. Illinois, 333 U. S. 571, Parker was held to have lost his right to raise federal constitutional questions because of state procedure which required that those questions be raised by direct appeal to the state Supreme Court. Parker appealed his case to the intermediate Appellate Court and, consequently lost any chance of an adjudication by this Court of those issues.³¹

³⁰ The Act of April 30, 1900, which established a government for the Territory of Hawaii, provided that: "The laws of the United States relating to appeals, writs of error, removal of causes, and other matters and proceedings as between the courts of the United States and the courts of the several States shall govern in matters and proceedings as between the courts of the United States and the courts of the Territory of Hawaii." 31 Stat. 158. In 1925, the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit was given power to review final decisions from the Supreme Court of Hawaii in all criminal cases "... wherein the Constitution or a statute or treaty of the United States or any authority exercised thereunder is involved. . . ." 43 Stat. 936. This power is still retained and cases from the territorial courts now come to this Court only after they have been reviewed by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. 28 U. S. C. § 225.

³¹ See also Central Union Co. v. Edwardsville, 269 U. S. 190.

III.

It seems to me that the considerations, analogies, and precedents discussed above admit of only one answer to the basic problem of this case. This petitioner had counsel in ample time to permit a petition for certiorari to this Court. There is not a suggestion in the record of any interference, through his own disabilities or otherwise, with petitioner's right to secure, through counsel of his own choice, review of his allegedly erroneous conviction.³² Therefore, I think that the District Court to whom this petition for a writ of habeas corpus from a conviction in a state court was presented should have refused cognizance of the writ, sua sponte, since the record showed that state remedies were available³³ after the alleged denial of constitutional rights and that the petitioner neglected to take advantage of those remedies.³⁴ "Available" as here used carries the connotation of ability and opportunity to take advantage of the state procedure.³⁵ Florida's failure to object to consideration of the petition for ³² In this the case differs from Williams v. Kaiser, 323 U. S. 471, 472; Tomkins v. Missouri, 323 U. S. 485, 486; Smith v. O'Grady, 312 U. S. 329, 334.

³³ A state can leave a procedure open through its own courts by which constitutional questions may be raised at any time. If the state court passes upon the merits, this Court can review the constitutional question upon appeal or petition for certiorari. Herndon v. Lowry, 301 U. S. 242, 247. See Lovelady v. Texas, 333 U. S. — (cert. granted); id. 333 U. S. — (dismissed), Ex parte Lovelady, 207 S. W. 2d 396.

³⁴ I would not here decide whether or not this rule applies to cases which are governed by the principle of Moore v. Dempsey, supra, or to the situation in which a state attempts to interfere improperly with the Federal Government.

³⁵ For example, if Wade had not been able to obtain counsel until too late for an appeal, appeal would not have been a remedy "available" to him. See Price v. Johnston, — U. S. —; De Meerleer v. Michigan, 329 U. S. 633; Downer v. Dunaway, 53 F. 2d 586, 589-91.

habeas corpus because certiorari was not requested cannot have the effect of authorizing a federal court to examine into the validity of the conviction. The reason for not allowing habeas corpus in such cases does not depend upon state acquiescence but upon the federal judicial policy of non-interference with state criminal administration unless there has been complete use and final exhaustion of state remedies.

On the hypothesis that the decision of the Florida Supreme Court dismissing Wade's appeal from the order of the Circuit Court of Palm Beach County, Florida, was entered on the ground that the remedy in Florida for the denial of the right to counsel was by appeal instead of habeas corpus, Wade stands in no better position. If that was the real basis of the dismissal of the appeal, Wade failed to avail himself of the remedy of appeal then open to him in Florida, though now foreclosed by limitation. No doubt his counsel by motion could have obtained a ruling from the Florida Supreme Court as to whether their dismissal was on a federal or state ground in view of the then rule of this Court in Ex parte Hawk, supra, at 117, that an applicant for habeas corpus in federal courts must exhaust state remedies including appeal or certiorari to this Court. This would have permitted Wade to bring his constitutional question here for review under a regular course of procedure. If the Florida Supreme Court had refused a clarifying order, this Court would have had resources for reaching a conclusion in such a situation. See Loftus v. Illinois, No. 59, this Term. Consequently, I think that the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals should be affirmed and the case remanded to the District Court with instructions that the petition for habeas corpus be dismissed.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE JACKSON and MR. JUSTICE BURTON join in this dissent.